Town Has Milk Inspector who Gets no Compensation—
Probate Court Allows Administrator's Account in Estate of $254.85, where Balance of $3.76 Remains to Meet Bills of $1,000—Franklin Lodge Installation

That section of walk on the Broad street bridge which extends from the Stanton store to the state line, one of the most traveled in town, never receives the attention or snow removal in the employ of the town, and as a result snow remains there until it is removed by the slow and slushy thawing process.

Occasionally Bliven, whose store is the first on the Connecticut side of the Pawtucket, will cause an invasion and a pathway is dug through the snow for the accommodation of the public.

The address of Dairy Commissioner Harwood of the Massachusetts Agricultural department on the subject of sanitary dairies and clean pure milk up to the legal standard, has caused interest in the appointment of a milk inspector, experienced in milk matters, who has time to devote to the duties. Large quantities of milk is produced in Westery and is sold to consumers without inspection of any nature, which is not in keeping with the strict regulations enforced in nearly all the other towns of the state.

There has been no milk inspector in Westery, until a year ago, when in addition to his duties as health officer, Lewis Stanton was appointed milk inspector. Simply to comply with the statutes, and with no intention of having him perform the usual duties of a milk inspector, the duties not being defined by the ordinances of the town of Westery. Mr. Stanton was appointed just as were the field drivers, measurers of grain, gaugers of casks, packers of fish, etc., and with no intention of expecting that man to devote much of his time in the inspection of milk and dairies, and without provision made for proper recompense. The appointment was made in a perfunctory way by the town council at that time, and Mr. Stanton retains that title until his successor is appointed.

Judge Edward M. Burke held regular session of the Westery probate court Tuesday afternoon. The will of Robert Johnston of New Bedford, who died on March 17, 1909, was presented for probate and proof taken. He bequeathed his estate, share and share alike, to his mother and two sisters, in Scotland. The will specifies that there had been legal separation from his wife, she receiving $800 as her share of the estate at that time, which explained the omission of her name in the will. There was postponement of the issuance of administration papers until the certificate of Mr. Johnston's death was filed with the clerk of the court, as required by law. Alexander Nelson of New Bedford was named as executor in the will and the nomination will be approved by the court, and Mr. Nelson was informed that he would be required to furnish a personal bond of $500. James W. Burke, James McConnies, John E. Johns were appointed appraisers. The matter of admitting the will to probate and appointment of executor was deferred until the next session of the court, pending the filing of death certificate.

The first and final account of Anna G. Zerbinio, executrix of the estate of Angelo Zerbinio, was presented, examined, approved and allowed and ordered recorded. There was a balance of $5, which according to the will is to be divided between five minor children; which was ordered deposited in the Washington Trust company, the bankbooks to be delivered to the beneficiaries when they become 21 years of age. George C. Cross, administrator of the estate of Charles H. Barber, presented his first and final account, which showed no balance for general creditors. The value of the estate was $254.85, which was utilized in the payment of administration of the state, leaving only a balance of $3.76 for the administrator. Bills aggregating over $1,000 against

SANG "FAUST"

For the First Time in America—Dr.

Julius Jordan Tells of Experiences with Dr. Leopold Damrosch as Director.

The Providence Sunday Tribune had an interesting story by Dr. Jules Jordan, a native of Windham, reminiscence of Dr. Leopold Damrosch and the earliest performances of "Faust" in America. In 1879, through some New York musical friends whom he met at Stamford, Dr. Jordan met Dr. Damrosch, who tried his voice and at once invited him to sing the Faust role, the first time the composition was given here. After several private rehearsals at Dr. Damrosch's home in New York and in public with the orchestra, Dr. Jordan says:

"I sang at these three or four performances then, which were so successful that a repetition of the work was demanded, and in two weeks later I returned for other performances."

"By that time I had fully recovered from the exertion and sang more to my own satisfaction. These performances were so successful that there was a demand from Philadelphia, and the same company that had sung several times in New York, which included the Philharmonic orchestra, the New York Oratorio society and the Arlon society of New York, together with the original soloists, gave a performance in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia."

"Soon after there was a performance of the work in Newark, N. J., by the same company. At this performance, Walter Damrosch made his first appearance as conductor, his father, Dr. Damrosch, sitting in the audience."
